Wednesday August 7th Anna Maria Island 8am: Quiet and slick at the beach this morning with miles of blue sky. Still nothing on the radar for swell makers, but some interesting scenarios are lining up. As of right now we look to remain flat through the up coming weekend. However we are watching a piece of energy that will slide South in to the GOMX towards the end of the work week. This will combine with a stalled trough East of the state, and could possibly have just enough ingredients to spin one up. This is a long shot, but this is all the hope we have at the moment. Other than this the tropics will be void of any significant areas of concern. A sea breeze will develop along the coast today and with it will be strong afternoon thunderstorms lasting into the evening. Keep your heads up Gullfster's, it can't stay flat forever! Have a wonderful hump day! - TD Gulf Temp: 90°

Wednesday August 7th Indianialantic 9:00am: Another hot and steamy August morning on top. Less than knee high and not ridable for surf this morning. There is a little shore break out there. More of the same for the rest of the work week. And around 1-2' surf out of the east for this weekend. Atlantic Temp: 76°
